4dimension is a vibrant initiative by students from the University of Tartu. This dynamic group of young talents aged 20-27, which includes reporters, designers and editors, has brought fresh perspectives to the media landscape. Beyond articles, they're shaping the future of media education through workshops, training courses and innovative projects, making a big impact on media literacy in the process.

What is Participation for you?

"Enabling participation means providing the freedom to explore topics young people are passionate about. There has to be space for experimentation and non-traditional approaches. This freedom, combined with the opportunity to keep one's skills sharp and express creativity, appeals to young people."

Wow!

4Dimension members, beyond media exploration, conducted physical interventions like the Mirrors project during the 2020 Media Week in Tartu. Mirrors displayed information on social media data management, showcasing 4Dimension's creative approach to promoting media and information literacy (MIL).
