Motivating Learners with Digital Badges: Reimagining Recognition

Supported by:

Erasmus+ / Cooperation Partnerships

EU Youth Programme Priority:

Digital Transformation

Topic:

Digital Participation Youth Participation / Youth Sector Development

Youth goals:

Quality Learning

Have you ever thought about attending a school without marks or grades? How about developing your skills in a place where your accomplishments are not measured by numbers? If your answer is yes to any of these questions, you will adore the Open Badge system, a free, online tool to validate (especially, but not only!) non-formal learning.

What is Participation for you?

“Many of us are involved in the life of our communities without recognising that we are doing good things. If we are conscious about our participation, it becomes meaningful participation, and gives us real opportunities for personal and professional development.”

Alexandra Isaicul PROJECT COORDINATOR

Wow!

Recognition should be one of the key things to think about when planning and organising learning activities. This project succeeded in passing on not just this idea, but also a very practical tool for decision-makers and schools to implement. This also helped highlight the importance of non-formal learning, which otherwise often gets overlooked — building a bridge between formal and non-formal learning.
